

A quick chat with

DR MICHAEL ZACHARIA

While he has performed countless cosmetic surgeries, the Sydney surgeon—now co-starring with Dr David Penn in Changing Faces, Style's six-part docu-series on cosmetic and dental surgery transformations (from July 2 at 8.30 PM)—says he has never had work done himself. The specialist in facial plastic surgery and rejuvenation is 51 and married with four children aged between 5 and 21. He earned his degree in Adelaide and has done more than 4,000 rhinoplasties. "I work hard," he tells WHO's Kate Halfpenny, "but you work to live and not live to work." Does he have a secret passion? "I love finding good red wine to drink and travelling."

What's the most requested celebrity feature? Angelina Jolie's lips, always. Sometimes they also ask for her nose, but it's not a great nose—it's just all right. Jennifer Aniston's nose is also on people's wish list.

How do you manage people's expectations? That is the most difficult thing for cosmetic surgery patients and the only way you can do that is to be brutally honest at the very beginning. I'll tell them the truth about what is the matter and what can be achieved. I tend to give them a number—say, "Your nose is a three out of 10, it's a terrible nose, the best we can do is make it a six." The problem is you have to keep pressing that because they hope they're going to be the one case that's a 10 out of 10.

Which star would you like to make over and who has gone too far?

Diane Keaton, with those eyelids that hang over the sides of her eyes. They frustrate the hell out of me because they're so easy to fix. Plenty have gone too far. Some of the Kardashians are on the verge of that.

What's the fine line between work that looks good and work that looks freaky?

Over the past couple of years fillers have been used too dramatically in the lips and cheeks. From a surgical point of view the freakiness is when people overdo things. They'll lift the brow too much, take too much fat from the eyelids and get that terrible Kenny Rogers look.

Anything you'd like to change about yourself? I need my eyelids done and I've said to the guys if the TV show is successful, I'll have them done next year on the show.

"I always give advice to people at parties if they ask for it," says Zacharia.

GOSSIP TO GO!

Gosling

EGGED ON

Ryan Gosling has thrown his weight behind a campaign to stop the sale of eggs from caged chickens. The actor, 34, has written to US retail giant Costco urging it to stop using eggs from caged chickens. "It's appalling that Costco has been selling these eggs with deceptive labelling on cartons featuring graphics of birds living out in a green pasture," wrote Gosling, who became a dad with Eva Mendes last September. "You're already eliminating cages for veal calves and pigs—don't you feel that chickens also deserve the same mercy?"

BOO HOO

It's a case of love-me-love-my-dog for Amber Heard. Johnny Depp's wife declared she won't be visiting Australia anytime soon after Agriculture Minister Barnaby Joyce threatened to have their terriers, Boo and Pistol, put down because they avoided quarantine regulations. The actress said she'd be avoiding the country "as often as we can, thanks to certain politicians there."

AWKWARD!

Since splitting last month, model Gigi Hadid and singer Cody Simpson have been avoiding each other. So imagine how awkward it was when the two were placed next to each other on a flight. "When you get seated next to ur ex on a plane," Simpson shared via Snapchat.

WALKING TALL

A 'BREAKING BAD' STAR CRACKS THE CATWALK SCENE

From meth labs to modelling: Breaking Bad's R.J. Mitte, aka Walt Jr, has made his runway debut in Milan. Mitte, who like the character he played on the hit show has mild cerebral palsy, walked for Vivienne Westwood.

The height of Sadness

"There were so many sad moments on Friends ... when Joey moves out of Chandler's apartment, then moves back in, and then Chandler moves out. And I'm still really sad about Smelly Cat."

—Phyllis Smith, voice of Sadness in Inside Out, on what gets her down

Mitte on Breaking Bad and (above right) in Westwood's Milan show on June 21.
